

Chapter 1: The Structure Gap

A free preview chapter from the playbook translating 10+ years of tech and commercial deal-making into repeatable execution frameworks.

Most businesses that stall aren't short on ambition. They're short on structure — a clear, repeatable way of turning an opportunity into a result. This chapter introduces the core idea behind the Opportunities Engine: that opportunity isn't something you wait for, it's something you build a system to find, evaluate, and act on.

“The gap isn’t ambition. It’s the missing system between an idea and the deal that proves it.”

The three failure points

Across ten years of deal rooms, sales floors, and market launches, the same three breakdowns show up again and again, regardless of industry:

- No technical foundation. The systems and workflows a business runs on were never deliberately designed — they accumulated.
- No commercial pipeline. Opportunities are reacted to as they appear instead of actively sourced and qualified.
- No narrative. The business can execute, but can't explain itself clearly enough to close the room.

What this book actually is

Not theory. Each chapter that follows pairs a real case teardown with the exact tactical steps used to close the gap — structured so you can apply it directly, whether the fix you need is technical, commercial, or narrative.

This is a preview chapter. The full playbook, and direct entry points into advisory sprints for each of the three gaps above, are available through Ibra — Market & Growth Advisory.